DC Advisory advised Three Sigma on its sale to GCOM Software

DC Advisory, a leading investment banking firm, acted as the exclusive financial advisor to its client Three Sigma Software on its acquisition by GCOM Software.

Three Sigma is the leading provider of software and services that streamline the delivery and administration of the Women, Infant, and Children Food and Nutrition Service program (WIC), a critical federal assistance program that currently serves over 7 million households per month and involves significant administrative processes.

GCOM delivers technology services and solutions to state and local governments focused on modernizing and consolidating legacy IT systems in the public health, public safety, licensing and permitting and cyber security markets. Its innovative solutions enable governments to transform how they deliver services to their constituents.

Together, GCOM and Three Sigma will offer an expanded range of high-growth, in-demand enterprise and operational services to existing customers, while also becoming more competitive for highly sought-after work in the state government marketplace.

GCOM is backed by Sagewind Capital, a New York-based middle-market private equity firm.

The team at DC was tremendously helpful, providing the right advice that enabled us to bring these two companies together. Their well-defined process along with an extremely talented team enabled my key management staff to focus on our customers during the sale process. We had many challenging decisions to make along the way and the DC team was there at every turn with the right advice and roadmap to guide us. It

| was truly a great experience.
